

Abstract

The invention relates to porous organic polymer mouldings which, owing to their properties, are particularly suitable as chromatographic separation materials, and to the production thereof by means of an imprinting process. To this end, polymerisation is carried out in a matrix moulding, and the matrix moulding is subsequently removed by washing out.

5

10

15

20

25

30